THE UK is one of the most unequal countries in the developed world. But inequality is not inevitable. We can all do our bit to reduce it. Here are TEN actions you can take:

1. AS A VOTER
   Vote for parties that pledge to tackle inequality. Read their manifestos and choose the party that you think has the best policies to reduce inequality.

2. AS A CITIZEN
   Hold your elected representatives to account: be an active citizen and challenge decisions that will worsen inequality, and lobby for changes that will improve it.

3. AS A WORKER
   Join a trade union. Countries with large and strong trade unions have lower inequality. Find a union to join today, here: https://www.tuc.org.uk/join-union

4. AS AN ACTIVIST
   Join or start a local equality group: our affiliated local equality groups do great work tackling inequality across the UK and you can join the movement.

5. AS A CONSUMER
   Favour good businesses that pay the real Living Wage, pay their taxes and treat their workforces well – and shun those that don’t wherever possible.
AS A SAVER
Move your money to ethical banks or building societies. Mutuals (owned by their customers) tend to be more egalitarian than shareholder-owned banks.

AS A PARENT
Send your children to your local state schools and always favour non-selective schools wherever possible. Educational inequality is a key driver of overall inequality.

AS A ROAD-USER
If you own a car or motorbike, drive at 20mph in residential areas. Road safety is an inequality issue. People in poorer areas suffer road accidents more frequently.

AS A NEIGHBOUR
Get involved in your community: meet your neighbours and set up ‘Play Streets’. Inequality erodes trust and reduces social interaction but you can change this.

AS A TAXPAYER
Pay all the taxes you owe, in the spirit not just the letter of the law. Erosion of our tax base leads to less money for public services and this hits poorer people harder.

The Equality Trust is working to build a better society by reducing economic and social inequality. But we need your help. Our work depends on generous donations from individuals who share our vision. Please help support active campaigning for a fairer society by becoming a supporter of The Equality Trust.
